Fired After Requesting Overtime Pay

Asking about your paycheck should never cost you your job.

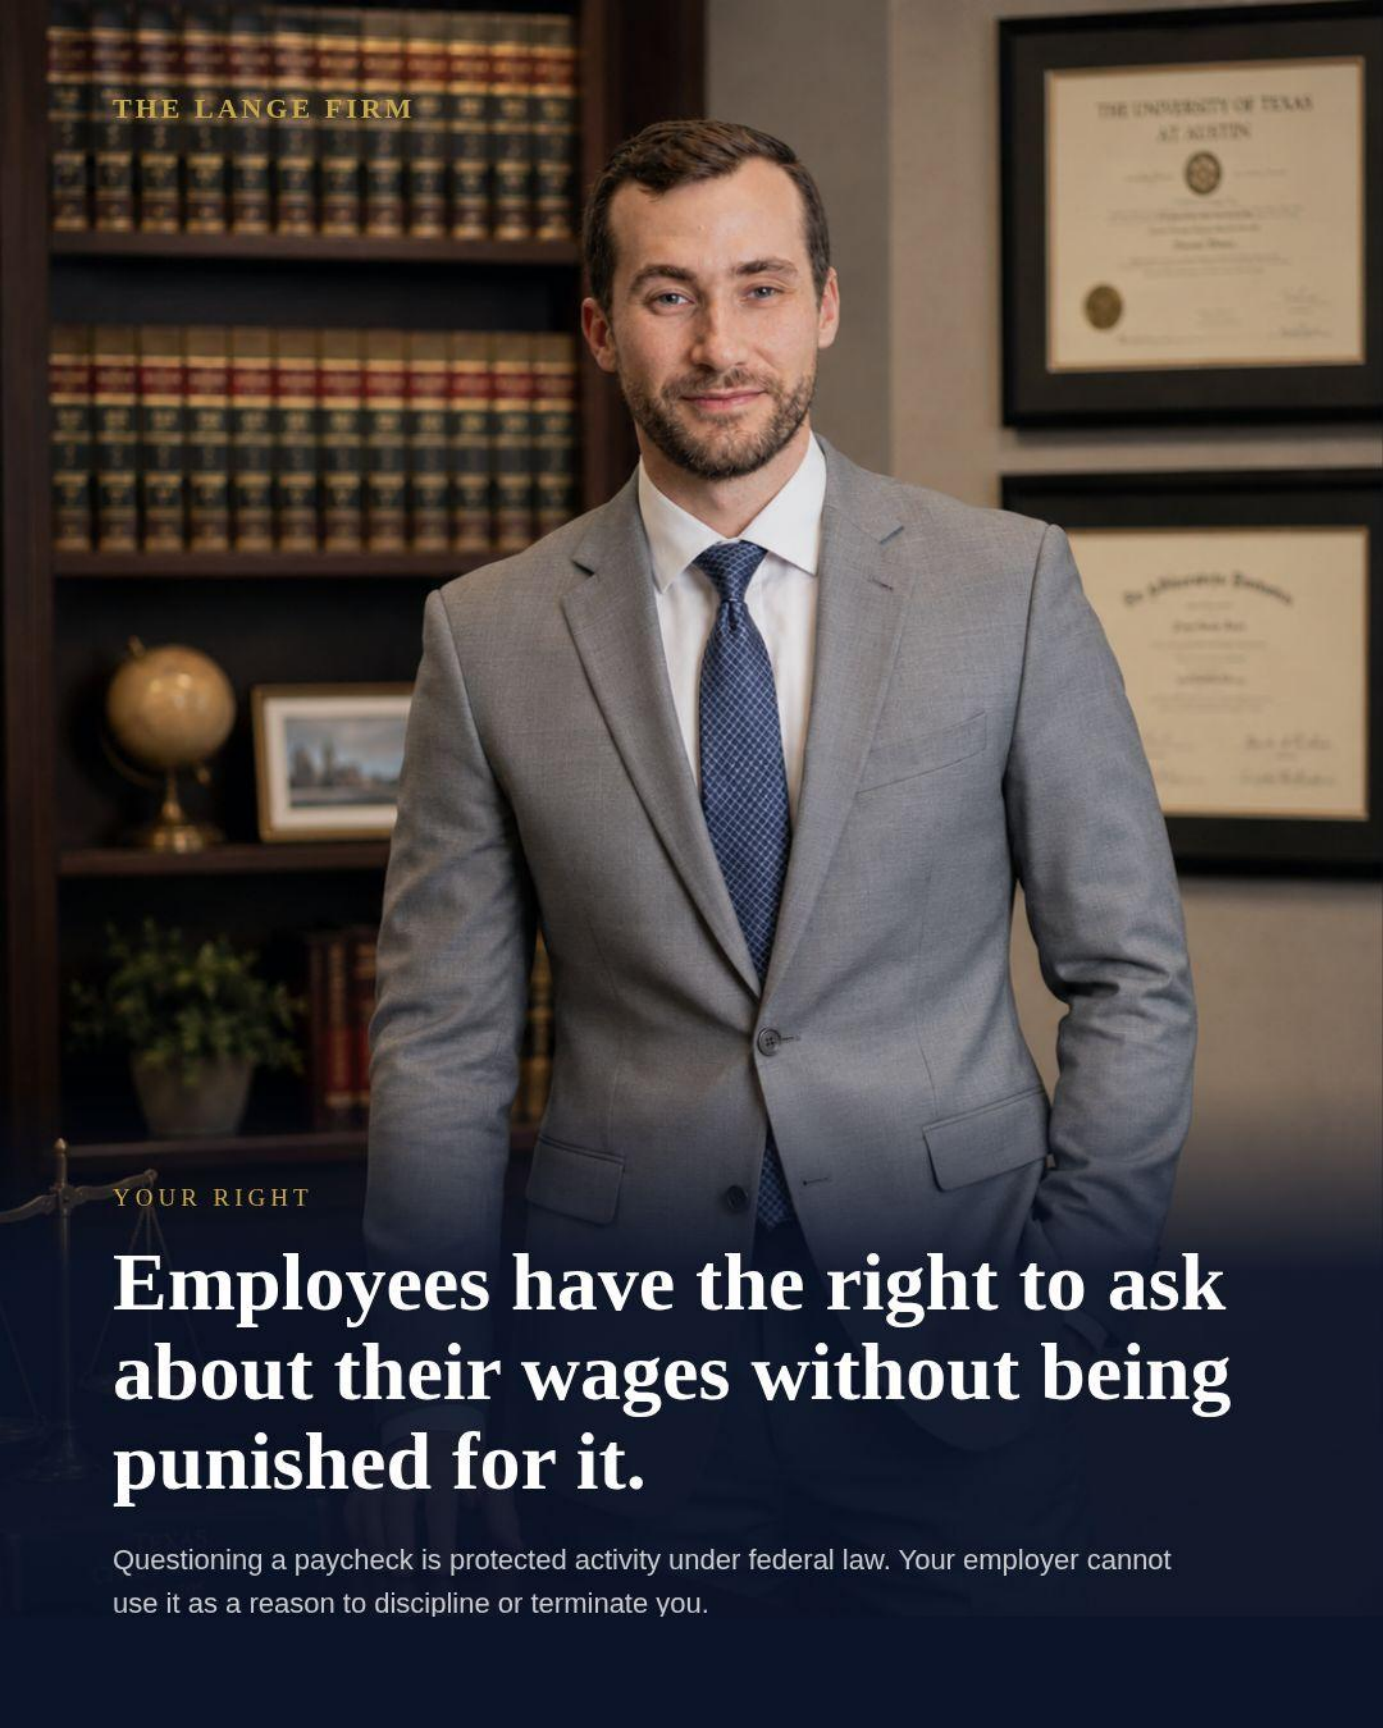

THE SITUATION

You asked why your overtime was not showing on your paycheck. A week later, you were told your position was no longer needed.

The timing is not a coincidence. The law recognizes that pattern.

YOUR RIGHT

Employees have the right to ask about their wages without being punished for it.

Questioning a paycheck is protected activity under federal law. Your employer cannot use it as a reason to discipline or terminate you.

THE LAW

Firing someone for asserting their wage rights may be illegal retaliation under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The retaliation claim is separate from the wage claim. You may have two violations, not one.

WE CAN HELP

The Lange Firm represents Texas employees in wage disputes and retaliation claims.

If you were fired, demoted, or punished after questioning your pay, that story is worth telling to an attorney.
